CREAT ITY
commons

The Cambridge Creativity Commons (CCC) is founded on the principle that every child is creative and that this ability can be developed in environments where creative process is practiced. Drawing upon the studio approach of imagining, creating, critiquing and exhibiting works of art, we engage teachers and students in the exploration of meaningful ideas using creative processes in arts and science-based experiential projects both in school and out-of-school. Linking studio practice with classroom learning, we work with teachers to design curriculum and instruction that focuses on the development of the 21st Century skills of creativity, critical thinking, collaboration and communication to transform teaching and learning.

As David Edwards points out in The Lab: Creativity and Culture (2010): "Labs, as environments that support, frame, and rationalize the value of creative process, are a fragile link to the future, and therefore critical to the future relevance of cultural expression." CCC offers programs in a "creative lab" model to encourage cross-disciplinary collaboration among teachers, artists, scientists and students to facilitate creativity through the arts and sciences. Essential to the success of this creative process approach is providing: 1) engagement of visiting artists and scientists to inspire and instruct students; and 2) collaboration of Cambridge Public School (CPSD) teachers and out-of-school time (OST) staff with the CCC director to develop lessons that support and reflect curriculum goals and objectives. This is in keeping with CPSD's habits of scholarship, which include problem solving, planning, organization, collaboration, creativity and perseverance.

- CCC advances new understanding of teaching, learning and assessment in a shared collective space for cross-disciplinary intellectual and creative exploration in all of the visual and performing art forms.
- CCC promotes and encourages collaboration of teachers, artists, scientists and students to imagine different ways of engaging in project-based interdisciplinary work and documentation of student learning.
- CCC offers resources (artistic, technical and reference) for teachers to explore unique and valuable ideas about teaching and learning through engaged conversations and experiential workshops. This supports a central goal of the CPSD Innovation Agenda "to expand professional development and collaboration opportunities for CPS educators, improving educators' experience and quality."
- CCC implements the "creative lab" model in the studio classroom, freeing students to take risks and in the process gain confidence in their creativity and ability to express what they know and feel.
- CCC supports alternative ways of documenting and evaluating learning, shifting the paradigm from measuring and testing to authentic and original project-based assessment.

CCC has emerged as a distinctive program in Cambridge from a pilot project initiated in the 2011-2012 academic year at the East Cambridge studio of Dorothy Arnold. It was this inspiring space that led to the development of a community partnership, supported by CPSD Superintendent Jeffrey Young, made up of the Arnold family, the Cambridge Community Foundation, the Cambridge Public School District, the Cambridge Arts Council, and Lesley University's Creativity Commons and Art Institute of Boston. Based on the model of Lesley's Creativity Commons, CCC provides teaching and learning opportunities focused on imagination, creativity and innovation for students and teachers. Over the past two years CCC has made vital and fruitful connections within the schools and served over 800 students from six local schools and five afterschool programs at no cost to students or teachers.

To the City Council,
Do not sell the historic Foundry Building.
Instead, the Foundry Building, in its entirety, should be financially sustainable and stand as a special landmark in Cambridge:
Home to Artists and the Arts.
Home of Community Space for Seniors and Youth.
Home of Non Profit Organizations Serving Cambridge's Kids.
Thank you.
